KOMOKA BROWN TROUT UPWELLING BOX

The boys on the Trout Committee have submitted this informative report on the Brown Trout project.

The trout section is forging ahead with plans to start the introduction of Brown Trout into the Thames River watershed this fall. Permission has been obtained to use a water source for an upwelling incubation box just outside Komoka. The spring fed water source is located in the Southwind gravel pit near the northeast bank of the Thames River.

Research on upwelling box construction and operation has been done during the months of July and August. The construction costs will hopefully be covered by a C.F.I.P. grant from the Ministry of Natural Resources. Volunteers will be needed to supply the labour to build and maintain the box during the box's operation. A proposal of intent for the project is being written for the Ministry of Natural Resources so permission from them can be obtained. The proposal will outline the club's long term plans for the Brown Trout project.

Some information about the biology of Brown Trout has been obtained from various sources. Brown Trout propagation using an upwelling box will be a very challenging project. The major difficulty in raising Brown Trout comes with the time of year that they spawn. The fish spawn in the late fall so the eggs must stay in the upwelling box all winter until early spring. The eggs will therefore have an increased chance of being damaged by disease or the elements. As a comparison, Brown Trout eggs will take as long as 100 days to hatch while Rainbow Trout may only take as little as 30 days in the spring run.

If you have any questions about the project or would like to help out please see a committee person at the next meeting. See you there.

FIRST LETTER TO THE EDITOR!

Dear Earl:

I was pleased to receive the very interesting newsletter. I have been a member since the second meeting, and have taken part in the netting at the gravel pit, and the catching of the largemouth bass at Komoka. I had to miss the last two meetings, due to work, so I found the newsletter very helpful in keeping up to date.

You mentioned a name for the newsletter -- what about "Thames Talk". Think about it anyway.

Keep up the good work!

Your truly,
Lawson Jones,
London
